Not illustrated. 1748 Excerpt: .like a continued tract of flames; and nothing less was to be expected than utter ruin and devastation. Methods of accommodation were consulted, and the collateral council, and the councils of state and of war advised serioufly, upon these sad calamaties: upon the whole, after many debates, it was resolved as the best expedient, that his excellency should command four regiments of foot, to reinforce that body that was already placed in defence of the castle: and this order was immediatly put in execution. The next resolution was, that a legal instrument should he printed, and affixed in the publick places of the city;-which should absolutely abolish all taxes and impositions, and a general pardon he secured to the offenders. As sooa as thb instrument was publified, it was sent into tfee.great market-place, that the populace might see and read it, and so disperse and return to their obedience. But these expedients produced no good effect; because the pardon was not so fully express d as to satisfy the people, wk- were afraid of an after-reckoning, if the conditions and articles were not perfectly in form, or could have beta evaded: so that all was undone again, and the treaty broken off. This disappointment much affected the viceroy, who resolved if possible, to renew the treaty; bt, .observing that the nobility were become odious to the people, and had he made use of their mediation, the dis. contents would rather have been augmented than suppress.v ed;...
