Excerpt: .knowledge is obtained from a physical examination, a microscopic examination of the sputum, a three-day temperature record, and an X-ray picture of the lungs. These, together with the history of the course of the disease prior to the beginning of treatment with tuberculin, when considered together, form a basis for a fairly accurate prognosis. The history must, of course, take accurate account of the patient's loss of weight previous to this examination--whether it was rapid or slow--whether the present-day treatment, as the hygienic dietetic and climatic treatment was applied and what effect it produced upon him--whether it was discontinued on account of the failure of the treatment, or whether the patient was impatient and did not give it a fair trial. Again, what are the habits of the patient and his mental attitude towards his occupation? Can the failure of the climatic treatment be attributed...
