Not peace alone, if it dishonored be, By tame submission to inglorious fate, And harrowing fears in wishing to be free. Not puff-cheeked wealth, of ease and luxury proud; Not fruitful fields, in smiling harvests dressed, Nor lengthy rail-roads, rolling thoughtless crowds From busy marts, to regions sore oppress d. Not factious jades, who after spoils have ran, And who by mobs are deified as Gods, When fifty thousand would not make one man, To charm our eyes by his most sapient nods. Not pusillanimous, time-honor d boors, Who, at the sound of danger, quickly rise, And run in haste to scape through the back doors, And patch their courage then by looking wise Not mousing, oily, slipp ry demagogues, Making their bargains o er a glass of brandy; Or bellowing, croaking, like a pond of frogs, About mileage, banks, and Uncle Sam s pay. No? men, upright, honorable, and brave, Whose noble souls are by true glory stirred, And who mid dangers rush, their land to save, And who by all their country s foes are feared.
