Excerpt: .a huge stone table and a niche for the sacrifices, which are offered twice a year. At a short distance there is a small temple where the worshippers rest and prepare themselves for their service. On inquiry we found we were fifteen li from the tomb of the sage himself; and learning that it was simply a repetition of his mother s, a mound and tablets, etc., we refrained, and pushed on to Kio-foo-hien, the city of Confucius, where we were gratified by the attention of the people and the number of books we sold. This city is much better and busier than that of Mencius, and is chiefly inhabited by the descendants of the great sage, --eight families out of every ten bearing his surname. It has two south gates, the one on the west side being opened only on the visit of an Emperor: this one is in front of the Temple of Confucius, and leads directly to it. The temple occupies a large portion of the western part of the city, and the chief part of it stands on the place where Confucius lived. Like the Temple of Mencius, it is built after the manner of the Confucian temples common in China, but on a grand and most superb scale: take it all in all, I have seen nothing like it in China. There is no structure in it to be compared to any of our first or second-rate cathedrals, but...
