The reference work in the library grows steadily in the recognition of the public. A gratifying increase in the number of requests for information is manifest. Questions, the answers to which are to be found in the wellcatalogued and excellent supply of material now available, come daily to the reference desk, and the persons inquiring come from an ever-enlarging circle. These questions are asked not only by persons who come to the library for the information, but also by those at a distance, through the agency of the telephone and the malls. This shows a...
